The How-to Guide for the Holiday Season

The holiday season is a big event for retail. Being on a college campus, you are in a prime location to market yourself as a holiday shopping destination. During your planning, keep the following in mind:

1 Make sure your website is up to date. 89 percent of consumers say they research products online before buying in person. Retailers should join customers on their shopping expedition by making it easier to find product features or reviews or risk being left behind.

2 Send limited-time promotional emails to trigger impulse purchases. NRF survey data discovered that more than half of shoppers said they preferred email notifications while another 24 percent preferred to receive offers through direct mail. Consider using a targeted subject line and keeping volume consistent.

3 Recommend products to your shoppers. Consumers are looking to retailers for recommendations during the holiday season. More than half of online holiday shoppers said they purchased an item that was recommended directly from a retailer.

4 Don't forget shoppers are looking for themselves too. More than 70% of respondents said they bought gifts for themselves during the holidays. Of the respondents, 20% said their holiday purchases were for themselves!
