Develop students' futures with emerging technologies in education

Adaptive learning technology products topped $41 million per year over the last two years. Source: Noodle Markets

The driving force behind makerspaces is rooted in the maker movement, a following comprised of artists, tech enthusiasts, engineers, builders, tinkerers, and anyone else with a passion for making things.

Coding and Robotics

At its core, robotics and coding moves students away from the solitary interface of a computer screen and into a collaborative environment providing a sensory learning experience, and an increase in hands-on innovation.

3D Printing

By providing a rapid production and prototyping tool, a 3D printer in the classroom enhances and expands students' understanding of existing concepts while allowing exploration of new possibilities, leading to better problem-solving and more active experimentation.

Virtual Reality

Virtual reality allows students to interact with three-dimensional images or environments in a seemingly real or physical way providing learning opportunities that districts wouldn't have access to.

Teaching and learning becomes more individualized and can be extended beyond the traditional classroom with the adoption of mobile learning strategies.

1:1 Computing

The goal for 1:1 mobile initiatives is to enable teachers and software to deliver more personalized content to students, to boost students' technology skills, and to empower children to do more complex and creative work.

Mobile Device Management (MDM)

MDM is critical to enterprise success, enabling the monitoring and management of mobile device deployments in education.

Content & Curriculum Solutions

The open education resources movement for digital curriculum has spawned a new ecosystem of education service providers.
