The Advocate Squad

Why Employee Advocacy Matters

Every retailer has to gauge the amount of time to spend on in-store versus online promotion, expertise of sales staff versus customer service team, and so forth. Investing in proper sales training of your retail sales team is proven to help your store create customer loyalty and boost sales. Here's how:

Socially engaged employees...

Increase your store awareness

Increase your store's position in search engine

Enable your customers to more easily find

Decrease your cost of creating digital content

Reinforce and legitimize your store marketing

Allow your store to tap into new networks

Help differentiate your company from others

Retail sales associates who engage with online product training sell more.

A lot more.

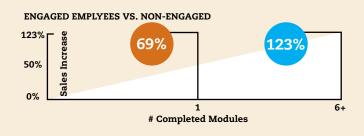

Sales associates who completed 1 short interactive product training sold more than those who didn't.

69%

And associates that completed six or more online product trainings sold 123% more than those who completed none.

Customers support this initiative too...

50% of customers are looking for expert advice on what to buy when they enter a store

73% of customers say product knowledge is what they need most from a sales associate

In short, even a little training can go a long way. Educating your sales people on the value proposition of the products you carry is becoming one of the most important trends in retail. Retailers and customers alike have long known that expertise on the sales floor leads to both happier customers and higher sales.

Increased employee engagement can equal a 12% increase in customer satisfaction which drives up revenue and margin growth.
